As to the dispatch of business, it is not unlikely that there would be a gain in the smaller counties; but would this be the effect in others, such as Silver Bow and Lewis and Clarke? In the two counties named the civil and criminal calendars are sufficient to occupy the time of the judges nearly the entire year; now add to these the very considerable duties that are performed by the probate judges, and delays in some of the business would inevitably result. With the growth of population this reazy-quilt jurisdiction.

A great part of the duties of probate courts are of a routine character, and rather ministerial than judicial. To visit such functions upon judges who have also to preside over important civil and criminal trials cannot be wise. By all means let the tribunes that have charge of the estates of tribunals that have charge of the estates of decedents be made as able and irreproachable as possible, but it is to be feared that the effect of the proposed system would be not so much to elevate the probate courts as to degrade the district courts. Rather let the state be divided into six or seven districts with power in the legislature to erect additional ones as the increase of population shall require. Thus we will have an elastic system that will ensure speedy trials and learned judges, and reduces to a minimum the appeals to the duce to a minimum the appeals to the court of last resort. We should not rashly depart from a plan of judicial organization that is approved by the experience of at least four-fifths of the states of the union.
